They're Not Crying Wolf

The opposition in the British Columbia legislature during the past three years has used the terms "broad sweeping powers" and "blank cheque legislation" so many times that their usefulness as descriptive epithets rapidly wore out. The cry of wolf was raised just a few times too often for the sensible observer to take seriously the loud and strenuous claims of opposition MLAs - most notably Social Crediters - that freedom was dying in the land, that B.C. was returning to Star Chamber rule, that Premier Dave Barrett was about to lock up the electorate and throw away the

That said, it must also be stated that the current cries of alarm about legislation introduced last week - amendments to the Department of Lands, Forests and Water Resources Act - seem entirely justified.

On the face of it, the legislative changes just legitimize the provincial government's purchase and operation of the Princess Marguerite ferry and authorize development of the province's related acquisition, approximately 10 acres of waterfront property on the Inner Harbor. The amendments "enable what has to be done to Crown land in the Inner Harbor," said Lands and Forests Minister Robert Williams.

Yes, and an awful lot more besides. Specifically, from now on the cabinet alone — no more reference to that bothersome tribe of nobodies, members of the legislature - may establish Crown corporations without number, and each may be loaned $10 million.

But, you ask, aren't they limited to operating the Princess Marguerite and sprucing up the Inner Harbor? A kindly-disposed blind man might believe the government's explanation on this issue, but the legislation is quite straightforward, rather barefaced in fact.

The Crown corporations which the cabinet may secretly decide to set up are limited only by definitions of powers in the bill which are so wide as to constitute carte blanche. Read on. The companies may "undertake such planning, development and management of Crown land or a ship or motor vessel as, in the opinion of the minister, will yield to the province optimum economic and social benefits.'

It doesn't say the Crown land owned by the province on the Inner Harbor of Victoria, it says "any Crown land." That's 97 per cent of the province of B.C.

But that's not all. The Crown corporations set up by cabinet decision - which is, after all, by only a simple majority of the 19 human, fallible, individuals who govern this province of 2.3 million people - may "engage in any other business necessary or incidental to the operation of a shipping or ferry service or relating to the real or personal property acquired or used in connection therewith."

It doesn't say a company to operate the Princess Marguerite. It says any business "necessary or incidental" to operating a shipping or ferry service. It requires no stretching of the imagination to see perhaps a ship chandler's firm established, or a travel agency, or a talent booking firm to supply the musicians who play on the Princess Marguerite, or anything the minister of lands, forests and water resources can conceive.

As for the government's argument that it requires these extraordinary powers to act swiftly in land development, let its past performance on the Inner Harbor speak for itself. Williams has sat on his hands through three sessions of the legislature and innumerable studies, and a rock has yet to be

The government isn't content just with operating in the province of B.C. The amendments would appear to contravene the BNA Act too in authorizing a Crown corporation to "take whatever action, or do any thing, necessary to operate a ferry and shipping service or to comply with a law of Canada, a province, of the United States of America . . .

There's one puzzling aspect. Why did the government want to create an inevitable political controversy over these powers above and beyond the simple auch thority to operate a ferry, which the legislature would have granted readily - when under the Environment and Land Use Act (created by the Socreds in 1971) the cabinet already had very wide arbitrary powers to "make such orders respecting the environment, or land use . . . notwithstanding any other act or regulation . . " (The act defines environment as "all the external conditions or influences under which man, animals and plants live or are developed," which seems all-inclusive.)

Premier Dave Barrett speaks often about his respect for the cherished traditions of the British parliamentary system of democracy, and it is undeniable that parliament is the ultimate law; it may declare a man to be a woman if it so wishes. But if this form of representative government requires a torate in those who govern, conversely those we elect to govern have a serious obligation not to abuse that trust.

In this case, the balance has been tipped in favor of the governing. Williams should withdraw his amendments to his departmental act, and amend them some more.

The Law and the Carrion Trade

TORONTO - How is it possible, you may well be asking in the light of Quebec's crime probe releations, for a black to develop for tainted meat? Surely in this day and age government is competent enough to ensure that mea sold for human consumption is in fact fit for human consumption, isn't it?

. The evidence from the Quebec crime probe is very clearly that government certain degree of trust by the elec- has not been competent enough - and not just in Quebec

The widespread-trafficking in carrion uncovered by that inquiry could have and probably did include sales and conion in Ontario and other provinces. Certainly one would have to be very sanguine to assume that it did not, the way the laws are now written.

There lies the crux of the problem. There is more than one law. Because of the weird constitutional split which has developed in matters agricultural since Confederation (the British North America Act unfortunately does not specifically mention agriculture), both the federal and provincial governments have jurisdiction over meat inspection and

Spotty Enforcement

But some provinces - indeed, I believe, most provinces - have not fully exercised their jurisdiction, with the result that big enough gaps exist to drive a racketeer's truck through to inspect, regulate and control the qua ty of meat entering into interprovincial and international trade. Federal inspectors are therefore stationed in all packing houses engaged in such trade and they pass upon all the pack produced, even though some or most of it may be consumed within the province of produc-

There are many, many small slaughter plants, however, where the meat is sold only locally or provincially. Meat inspection and quality control at such plants is a provincial responsibility. How this responsibility has been discharged varies widely from province to province.

In Ontario, which is generally conceded to have a good program, the prow ince's Meat Inspection Act prohibits the slaughter of an animal for human consumption unless it has been inspected by fore slaughter. Meat cannot legally be sold or transported unless the animal has been so inspected, the slaughter house is licensed, and the meat has been collectors, who must in turn sell only to licensed receiving or rendering plants. Records must be kept and the meat, if ed with charcoal and marked unfit for human consumption. Its main legal use, of course, is as pet food. But - and here is where one of the great gaps develop - it is not against Ontario law to ship such meat, properly treated and marked, to anywhere in Ontario or out of the province and it does not appear to be against federal law either, which is very strange.

National System

Thus, it is practical, probably legal and certainly profitable for a rendering plant in Ontario to ship pet food to an unlicensed, uninspected packing plant in Quebec where it can be turned into, or would pass undetected at the consumer level. It would, of course, be illegal to sell such meat back to Ontario human consumption but catching it is

As a result of the crime probe disclosures. Quebec has announced all its slaughter houses will have to be licenced and inspected, and that meat salvaging operations will be much more tightly ontrolled than formerly. This probably will close down the black market until the racketeers discover another loophole. The only way loopholes can be prevented is to have one comprehensive system of inspection and control throughout the country. But that would involve the provinces' surrendering jurisdiction to the federal government, and that isn't going to happen

TOM WICKER

Murder by Any Other Name

NEW YORK - In 1960, John F. Kennedy was a senator running for president. No one would suggest that, as such or as the scion of a powerful family, or as the exemplar of a new political generation, he had the right to have anyone killed for whatever apparently useful purpose.

After Jan. 20, 1961, he was president of the United States. By virtue of that title, can he be said, under any moral, religious or ethical view of life, to have had some right not previously his to order a specific human life extinguished in pursuit of what he believed to be the national interest?

This is not the pacifist question whether any killing or any war can ever be justified. It is a question of simple decency, whether outside the exigencies and brutalities of warfare any political personage has the right to order the death of any other human being for the political purposes - whatever they may be of the person who gives the order.

Only a Euphemism

It certainly has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that President Kennedy, or any person colored with his authority, ever gave such an order. Yet, the evidence mounts in obscene detail that the murder-a word for which "assassination" is only a euphemism-of Fidel Castro was a subject of frequent, pointed and practical discussion in the Kennedy administration, sometimes by the president himself:

Major-General Edward G. Lansdale for example, that he was ordered by Robert Kennedy, acting under John Kennedy's authority, to prepare contin gency plans to depose Castro, and that in the operational planning for that purpose, Castro's murder may have been 'contemplated."

According to an undisputed report, General Lansdale's planning operations formed only one "track" of what was a 'frantic' search by the CIA after the Bay of Pigs fiasco for some means of

The fact is that any reasonable leador contemplating clandestine means has to take into account the likelihood that the deposed political leader will be killed, as. for instance, Ngo Dinh Diem was killed after having been ousted in a military coup in South Vietnam. Lansdale, in fact, has conceded that he knew, in planning for the deposition of Castro, that "operationally down the pike something like this could emerge." Those who ordered the contingency planning could hardly have known less.

There is, moreover, evidence too rich in detail to be lightly dismissed that the CIA plotted with well-known members of the so-called mafia to murder Castrothe CIA for political purposes, the other gangsters in vengeance for the loss of

The Associated Press has reported is investigating the CIA, has obtained the minutes of a high-level Kennedy adotes fire. Still, why has no one who was responsible in that period responded with even a show of moral outrage? Why has no one fervently denied that the highest American government leaders could even "contemplate" such a reprehensible idea as deliberate political murder? What did McGeorge Bundy, President Kennedy's assistant for national security and now the head of the Ford Founda tion, mean when he told reporters that White House officials of this time discussed "how nice it would be if this or that leader" were not around any more?

Just Ineffective

On March 31, 1964, for another example, George Smathers, then the senator from Florida and a close friend of Kennedy's recounted in an oral history inported in Cold War and Counter revolution: The Foreign Policy of John F. Kennedy, by Richard J. Walton)

"We had further conversation of assassination of Fidel Castro, what would be the reaction, how would the people react, would the people be gratified. I'm sure he (John F. Kennedy) had his own deas about it, but he was picking my brain . . . As 1 recollect, he was just throwing out a great barrage of questions. He was certain it could be accomplished. I remember that-it would

"But the question was whether or not it would accomplish that which he wanted it to, whether or not the reaction throughout South America would be good or bad. And I talked with him about it and, frankly, at this particular time I felt, and I later on learned that he did, that I wasn't so much for the idea of as-sassination particularly when it could be pinned on the United States.' Murder was not wrong; it was just ineffective and by any other name

Room for Morality in World Politics?

By ANTHONY LEWIS

What part should considerations of law and morality play in the conduct of international politics? Are they mere distractions from reality? Is power the only motive force, the only true guide to

They are old questions, as old as organized society, but sharpened by the Vietnam experience. At the end of that war an English philosopher, Stuart Hampshire, reflected on them in a talk

There are 'two radically different ways of looking at international poli-tics,' Hampshire suggested. The first is that of the person who calls himself a realist — "the hard-minded student of foreign affairs." In contemporary U.S. jargon, the adjective would be "hard-

The realist usually avoids "moral judgments and legal arguments, counting most of them irrelevant. He thinks the same of predilections for Commu-nism or anti-Communism, or for this or that social structure." He assumes that every leader will try to extend his country's power as far as permitted. By so assuming he reckons that he can calculate the motives and likely action of his equivalents abroad and avoid the worst by balancing power against power.

The other figure is the moralist. He worries about such things as truthfulness in public discourse, respect for law, the rights of minorities, freedom of expression. Most of all he is concerned about the human suffering that so often seems to accompany "realism" in international affairs.

As a symbol of realism's less happy side, Hampshire mentions the pictures of Richard Nixon and Leonid Brezhnev at the summit, "embracing each other and exchanging hearty jokes."

Why, he asks, "did the heartiness seem so natural, so appropriate, be-tween these two men who, after all have opposing political creeds? Precisely because they were, and visibly were, men who share the same unrestrained appetite for power, the same ruthless realism and the same enemies. They were attracted to each other by a shared enmity to those moralists at home who would insist on the rights of orities and on the right to oppose government policies.

In most of us there is some of the re-alist, some of the moralist. Hampshire observes that Britons and Americans often try to deal with the tension beis a moral basis for whatever govern-ments do — presuming that they are the virtuous forces resisting the oppres

When Cambodians seized a U.S. ship, Americans are able to work up a fine sense of outrage at their lawlessness. They forget that they dropped 250,000 tons of bombs on Cam-bodia, and do not try to imagine what it would be like to live under such an assault. They forget that they are the only power to have dropped huge tonnage o bombs on anyone lately. Or used de foliants or asphyxiation bombs.

The odd thing is that "realism," in its most uncompromising form, may turn out to be unrealistic. It was the hard-nosed men who got us into the Vietnam war — and kept us involved for so many useless years.

On Vietnam, Hampshire says, "the minority of delicate moralists were right, from the beginning, from 1965 on-wards, were right year after year . . . The professionals, the men of power who generally understand the world's business, have in this case been totally Hampshire takes U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger and a Russian writer, Aleksander Solzhenitsyn, as examples of the two ways of looking at the world. Solzhenitsyn seems a doubtful choice, for all his humanity and coursel to the decided to the objection. age; he is too ideological, too theological to represent what Americans at least would see as an alternative to ruthless 'realism' in world affairs.

My choice would be George Orwell. He had no illusions about human na-ture, and he distrusted ideologies, but he insisted that we must struggle to maintain in human affairs the element of morality. He called it decency.

That was really the point of 1984. Orwell sketched a picture of a world of giant powers in a state of perpetual war called peace, fighting not on their own territories but in little countries at the fringe. He was warning us that if we compromise our humanity, if we let our concern for truth and decency slip, that is where we shall end.

When a U.S. secretary of state seriously urges B52 bombing in re-sponse to the seizure of a ship, as Kissinger just did, it is time to recall George Orwell. He showed us the dan-ger of thinking only in terms of power. He showed us, as one critic put it, what is to be expected if in fact morality is excluded from politics.

be defined in the same way for all employees, whether in the public or the private sector, in essential or non-esser tial services, in competitive industry or in monopolies.

It was a Liberal govern-ment of which Mr. Trudeau was a part which extended the right to strike in the public service. Yet in his earliest months as prime minister Mr. Trudeau cast doubt on that

He pointed out that with strikes in the private sector, "the union knows that at some point the company will go broke and it should stop short of that in its wage de the public, there have been some pretty irresponsible statements . . . But can Canadians live with it indefi-nitely? When the exercise of that right, when the perversion indeed of that right, causes a Minister of the Crown to describe a key division of his area of responsibility as a "disgrace", it be comes very difficult.

Government services almost invariably monopolies, where the strike-lockout equation does not work. The right to withhold a service in a mo-nopoly is a much stronger right, a much stronger weap-on, than it is in the world of commerce, where there are competing forces.

An official of the Ontario govern-"unless Bluenose II had equipped her-self with proper holding tanks for her toilets ("heads" in nautical parlance), well, Ontario would simply drum her off the lakes.

And John Buchanan - whose duties as the leader of the Tory opposition in Nova Scotia inspire him to be ever-ready to side with the critics of even so revered a government-owned boondog-gle as Bluenose II — promptly demand ed a full-scale inquiry into the inland cruises of "this blotch on the tourism

Again Bagnell leapt to defend the honor of Bluenose II. He complained directly to Ontario Environment Minister William Newman, and sure enough, it turned out that the vessel had stopped in Montreal, on her way west, to have chemical toilets and holding tanks installed so she'd meet Ontario's standards of pollution control.

Now, however, an absurdity has oc-curred even to some Nova Scotians who understand the sewage advantages tidal water has over lakes: Bluenose II, like Halifax for that matter, has always dumped raw waste into Nova Scotia waters, but, the moment she visits genteel Ontario, she spends Nova Scotian money to install holding tanks. The world is very complicated.

Anyway, the environment minister for Ontario boarded the vessel at her first stop in Ontario, and he phoned the minister of tourism in Halifax to say that, yes, Bluenose II's toilet facilities were just fine, and he wanted to say how sorry he was for any misunder-standing and, yes, he'd be sending his apology down east in writing.

And thus, two great leaders exercised shrewd and speedy diplomacy to relieve the tension of a potentially explosive inter-provincial situation, and thereby removed forever one more dans threat to the amity of the Canadian Confederation.

Still, it's probably just as well the Great Lakes do not extend further west. Heaven alone knows what might happen to the country if Bluenose II were to sail on and on, into the sunset, bloody but unbowed, and down to the great ports of Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon Edmonton and Calgary.

Tax Shuffle Urged As Inflation Relief

tax reporting, the value of the $100 inventory item would be fixed at its $160 replacement

Philip explained, as an example, that if a business has a $100 item in inventory and this would enable the company both to replace the said.

Tax on the transaction would be $20 instead of $50, and this would enable the company both to replace the

A Record Year Despite Slump

By AL FORREST

DUNCAN - Doman Industries Ltd. will achieve record sales of almost $50 million this year despite the downturn in the lumber market, says president H. S. Doman.

Sales had totalled a record $42.4 million in 1973 before sliding to $38.8 million in 1974. In both years the total was high enough to put Doman in the list of top 50 B.C. companies and number one on Van-couver Island.

The increased sales will be the result of an energetic expansion program that has continued during the B.C.

Sawmill expansion has sawmii expansion has given the company a capacity to produce 225 million board feet of lumber per year, up almost 100 million from 1974. This total will rise to 450 million at year's end with the opening of a new sawmill complex at Cowichan Bay.

The company has launched a new lumber distribution proj-ect on the lower mainland, selling wood products to wholesale-retail outlets.

This new subsidiary, called Doman Timber Sales, will ac-count for up to $7 million in sales this year, Doman said.

sales this year, Doman said.

The distribution centre is on 17 acres in Richmond.

Lumber prices will be low but this will be more than offset by the greatly increased volume of production and sales, he said.

Sales of the company's trucking division will also be higher, partly the result of higher rate charges.

U.S. recession is very near and the economy of British Columbia would begin to im-prove about six months later. He noted that the American economy always tends to im-prove in advance of a presi-

Normally, he said, there is an upward surge of economic activity after a recession. "This time the improve-ment will be so gradual that you won't notice you are walking uphill until you get near the top."

Doman said there were risks in being optimistic but expansion had almost always paid off for the company in

Games Athletes Bitter, Quiz Shows

TORONTO (CP) — What drives our Canadian athletes to be faster, higher, braver as they head for the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal is inspiring in theory, but something else in practice.

More thon 50 per cent of 286 Canadian Olympic candidates, in 18 sports, responded to a questionnaire to determine the full extent of athletes' income and living costs, punctuality on government grants, adequacy of facilities and coaching. Here is a summary

"The thing that makes me sick is the millions of dollars they're spending on the Olympics. But what about the athletes? I've been training now for more than 10 years and what have I got for all that time but a few trophies and a time but a few trophies and a two-bit reputation."

That type of bitterness cuts across all sports and, al-though the athletes were not named in the summary, a sig-nificant number noted they would be willing to be interviewed by the media.

"Athletes who qualify for the Olympics should perform as individuals in their own choice of dress and burn their Canadian uniforms in protest. It certainly is too late to get into the line-up for medals."

"How can Canada expect me to train and do my best?

Eating peanut butter sandwiches for breakfast, lunch and supper is a bit too much.
When the hell are we going to get some respect? Why train when you're hungry and have no goal.

"... We are being asked to make great sacrifices, yet as it stands now, I can only look forward to greater debts, a ruptured social life, loss of my school year, and frustraachieve what I potentially

The majority of athletes who replied to the question-naire said they experience serious financial difficulties. Fifty-eight per cent noted they were unable to meet expenses during the past year and 14 persons said they were dependent upon their parents or spouses.

The replies challenged the impression that swimmers come from rich families, or thae these young athletes need not make any personal sacrifices in order to train.

... They put out the money I need for travelling, competing and training above the $600 I get from Game Plan . . . They have had to cut into a large chunk of their savings to help me and there's no more left

Eleven Killed In Jail Blaze

SANFORD, Fla. — Sixty-eight prisoners were trapped in the burning Seminole county jail Monday, pathetically coughing and screaming for help.

Ten of them died, along with a guard who tried to help them escape. Thirty-nine others were sent to hospitals. The tragic hour-long blaze was started by a prisoner who set his mattress on fire.

"I could hear the inmates screaming and yelling," said John Fulenweider. "They were screaming 'Help, get us out. Get us out." I could hear them coughing. It was really

The unclaimed bicycles were being stored at the rear entrance of the two-storey building in downtown Sanford in preparation for a forthcoming auction.

Jailers have not determined whether the prisoner who set the blaze was among the vic-mattress fires in the jail in the past six months. Officials said they were set by juveniles protesting overcrowded conditions. The jail was de-signed to hold 85 prisoners, but officials said it housed more than 100 at times The fire began in a tiny hos-

We said: Mining companies waste our natural heritage.

Alfred Powis said:

To help business tell its story in this time of criticism and misconception, a series of interviews between freelance writer Dean Walker and the Chief Executives of major corporations has been arranged by The Investors Group, whose associated companies are shareholders in a large number of Canadian corporations. We believe this series will surprise and enlighten every Canadian-

The questions and answers have been edited, but a more complete version of this interview, and others in the series, is available by mailing the coupon below. In this interview, Dean Walker talks with Alfred Powis, President, Noranda Mines Limited.

"Nearly all the copper that has been mined through history is still around."

WALKER: You're president of Noranda Mines Limited, a billion dollar company. Aren't you digging up, processing, selling metals too fast? Wasting them? Won't we run short?

POWIS: Not in my lifetime. Not in my children's lifetime. Not ever, really.

Just look at copper. In terms of what we know exists, we've never, in mankind's history, been in better shape than we are right now.

Here's just one example. Noranda is paying $7-million toward an international program to learn how to collect metals from the ocean floor. When we get that to work, we'll have virtually unlimited reserves. They're just lying there. Another thing about metals is that you don't consume them, you transform them.

Nearly all the copper that has been mined through history is still around.

WALKER: But how can we get at copper the Romans mined?

POWIS: The Romans' copper has probably been reused many, many times.

In any year, 25 to 35 percent of all the copper we use is old copper. If we completely stopped mining tomorrow, we would still have copper. There just wouldn't be enough of it, that's all.

WALKER: Even if, longterm, we won't run out of metals, there are periodic shortages, and then prices go up. When that happens, wouldn't it be better to avoid waste by letting the government decide who should POWIS: In the end, the marketplace is always a more efficient altocator of resources. Whenever bureaucracies have tried to do it, they have made a horrible mess of things.

WALKER: Not always. Government rationing worked during the war.

POWIS: For a short period. If it had been permanent, it would have been ruinous. Government control damn near ruined our main mine. We were ordered to "highgrade", to pick the eyes out of it for maximum possible production, and that's entirely inconsistent with good mining practice. A couple more years of government controls and we would have lost that mine, because it wouldn't have been economic to run any longer.

"Government control damn near ruined our main mine?

WALKER: But business wants maximum productivity. What stops you highgrading under normal conditions

POWIS: The fact that we want to stay in business! Highgrading is the most wasteful approach you can possibly imagine. If we'd had to abandon that mine then, we would have left behind 25-million tons-of ore. That's about 500,000 tons of copper. Now there's waste!

If you highgrade a mine, you might make extra money for three or four years. But, if you settle for less at first, then operate it for twenty years, you'll be much further ahead.

Mining is entirely a matter of longterm investments. If we found a new mine tomorrow, it couldn't possibly make us money before 1980. When we invest in a new smelter, we have to be sure we will always have ore to keep that smelter busy. When we borrow twenty year money to finance something like that, we're assuring the lender we'll be around twenty years down the road to pay him back. And, if our lenders didn't believe us, we'd be out of business

If Noranda's aim was just to make maximum immediate profits, we would cut out research, exploration, investment, and immediately increase our earnings by $25-million.

"We're planning to stay around; shareholders and employees are counting on us."

WALKER: Then why don't you?

POWIS: Because we're planning to stay around. We have shareholders and employees who are counting on us. If they thought we were going out of business in five years, it would be an unattractive place to work and to invest.

Noranda found its first great mine in 1927. If we had said then, "We'll just exploit this and then, when it's finished, we'll walk away," the company would disappear this year. That original mine goes out of production in 1975. Yet our employees, and the community, won't even notice it go, because we have alternative employment.

WALKER: Even if Noranda is not wasteful. surely industry in general is. Look at how it uses up trees to create packaging.

POWIS: How can you "waste" a resource that renews itself?

No company in Canada cuts more than its forests' annual growth, so the trees aren't going to disappear. If you didn't cut them, you'd get no economic value from them, and they'd grow, mature, die, rot. Is that less wasteful?

Maybe in the past some unscrupulous operators cut more than the annual growth, and we lived to regret it. Today such people aren't allowed to operate. The rules have been tightened, which is a very good thing. If you play a game without rules, you're in the jungle

We've all learned a lot from experience. Big business in its present form is very new, a phenomenon of the last fifty vears. We know, now, there are different restrictions on a big business than there ever were on the individual entrepreneur.

An individual might decimate a forest to make a fast buck and get away with it. But a corporation can't. It's responsible to its shareholders-in our case, 30,000 of them-and to its employees. Business is institutionalized, and that gives us different kinds of responsibilities. We can't look at things as an individual might. Maybe that's the fundamental change.

WALKER: You said there have to be rules, but recently business has been complaining that too many government rules are putting our entire private enterprise system in danger. Are those complaints just tactics, or is there a danger?

POWIS: When business warns about something, it's not just tactics. It stems from serious concern, usually about the long term.

In the 1960s, when business warned about the inflationary impact of government actions, people said, "That's just" Chamber of Commerce talk. There's business, sounding off again?' We were ignored. And now we have inflation.

Yes. I do see a real danger to the private enterprise system now. The entire mining industry is endangered by taxes.

WALKER: What do you mean by "endangered"? Surely you'll go on digging the stuff up?

POWIS: We'll go on digging it up from existing mines, as long as we can turn a dollar on it. But the incentive to look for new mines is destroyed. In British Columbia, we have three operations that will pay more than 100 percent in taxes t year. It new mine in B.C.

I can point to four mines we developed for years, which, under today's taxes, I could not justify developing.

The government has finally reversed the alchemists' dream. Through taxation, it has converted valuable ore into something useless.

And that, surely, in any way that anyone can look at it, is the ultimate in waste.

Ferguson, Roxburgh Serve Warning Notices

The others might like their chances better it the champions of Victoria and Vancouver were "no shows" when the 72-hole tournament starts Wednesday at Nanaimo.

Cee Ferguson, Victoria's champion for a third straight year, and Doug Roxburgh, back on top on the mainland, appear to be at the peak of their games. Along with defending champion Bob Mitchell of Vancouver, they have to rate as pre-tournament favorites.

If Ferguson and Roxburgh stroke the ball as they did in winning their respective zone titles, they'll be an inte pair to watch. The folk who get up to Nanaimo will have a chance.

Roxburgh and Fergie happen to be included in the same threesome, along with Brian Hobbis, a former Victorian now living in Prince George, for the first two days.

Ferguson and Roxburgh turned in impressive performances Sunday. Fergie won the Victoria title by a four-stroke margin while Roxburgh was more convincing when he elaimed the Vancouver crown. claimed the Vancouver crown.

Roxburgh was the only one to break par in Vancouver. He shot a pair of three-under-par 69s at Point Grey, playing extremely tough, to finish a whopping eight shots ahead of Pip Steele.

On top of that, he turned up with a rather hot practice round on his home course last week. Roxburgh hit Marine Drive with a 30-33-63.

One thing's for sure. They're getting a good course on which to prove their talents.

Harry Young, Victoria's resident governor on the Royal Canadian Golf Association, warned the national body in 1972 that the Canadian seniors championship was heading into an entry-handling problem entry-handling problem.

There was an overflow, and a problem, when the seniors came to Uplands. Because of a conflict with Stampede Week In Calgary, the problem was even greater this year.
Entries were to close May 26, or when the field of 184 had been reached. By the second week of April, 256 entries had been received by the RCGA. Subsequent entries had to be refused, and a number of prominent seniors were left out in the cold.

Bill Thompson of Victoria, this year's B.C. champion and also the Pacific Northwest Seniors Golf Association titleholder, was one whose original entry was refused.

The RCGA apparently decided to accept provincial champions even if their entry did come late. Thompson is in. It would have been a crime not to have him and other provincial champions included.

Bill, incidentally, had a unique golf round the other day at Oak Bay. Playing with his wife, Julie, and Ken and Madeline McNamara, Thompson scored a hole-in-one on the birdied 17 and — possibly unnerved by it all — finished with a bogey on the 18th.

Crampton told the committee the filters, bought in quantities of 500, would add about one-third the cost of installation. Warren said Saanich's budget would only allow the purchase of 50 new street lights.

Crampton was asked if federal government money would be available. He said the National Research Council had refused to release any funds for such a project.

"The government is reluctant to enter into any policy which is opened," he said.
On the suggestion of the committee, Crampton will pursue the possibility of obtaining federal assistance.

Elbow Rooms

That's what you get on our wide-bodied jets to Toronto. Elbow Rooms. Our 1-1011's have 3. And our 747's have 4.

We call our economy passenger compartments Elbow Rooms because that's what they are. Because all of our seats are 2 inches wider than anyone else's. Which may not sound like much, but it can make a big difference on a 4,5,6

You don't have to wony about that intensely polite competition with your fellow passenger's elbow on the same armrest.

And, you don't have to worry about whether or not you smoke. Because our Elbow Rooms have sections designated as smoking and non-smoking.

And, you don't have to worry about having something to do. Because we've got movies on our 747's and free stereo music on our L-1011's.

So all you have to do is get on a plane to Vancouver, make the easy connection to one of our wide-bodied jets. And relax. In an Elbow Room. Call your Travel Agent. Or us, Air Canada.

Evidence as to the "Englishness" of Victorians' origins is buried in all kinds of unlikely places. For example, the annual Ross Bay Cemetery, report submitted to city aldermen last

One table on birthplace details shows that of 93 burials in the cemetery last year, 22 were those of native-born British Columbians and 20 of residents born in England. There were nine interments of residents from other parts of Canada, and six of Scottish-born people.

A good longevity record is reflected in another table on ages of the deceased. Twenty-eight — 20 women and eight men — were between the ages of 81 and 90, while 15 persons were aged 91 to 100.

In the latter category, women again outnumbered men, by "Happiness is 60.9 (cents per gallon)," a sign at the Imperial Esso self-serve on the Island Highway enthused.

Maybe the prospect wasn't enough, though, to induce careless rapture in passing motorists. Last week the gasoline price was reduced by one cent a gallon.

Could the small independent operator directly across the road have anything to do with it? He pumps the gas himself and he's still charging 58.9 cents.

CHRISTIE hit the roof, and phone

Around City Hall when Thomas Ludlow Christie was an alderman, the joke was that the initials T.L.C. stood for tender loving care — the city's finances.

Christie was the finance committee chairman, and among grant-seekers in the arts fraternity, especially, was known as a somewhat stingy old codger.

But in retirement Christie's not at all sure that the same tender loving care is being displayed toward city taxpayers like himself.

When he received his 1975 tax bill recently, showing a thumping increase, he telephoned each of the aldermen in turn and expressed his feelings on the matter. At length.

The recipients of the calls are now said to be in fair condition and slowly recovering.

Victoria's cleanest-cut used car salesman Bud Mesher (he's got a crew cut) hasn't let up in his war on speed.

Mesher originally dreamed up the blue "Please Don't Speed" stickers seen on many local cars. "I had 15,000 of them printed," he said. "We are down to about 300 now. I'm going to order more. They've been a great

In years past, it was a case of travel them early, before the loggers went to work, or after they knocked off for the day. The weekends, of course, were clear sailing.

The rules may have been changed — but that doesn't change the awesome size of a load of logs rolling round a wilderness bend at you, under a snorting truck which leaves the impression it isn't going to or maybe can't stop.

The law of the land may be with the public but the law of survival is stronger. The forestry companies still have that working for them.

Here's a provincial government and to throw all and sundry into transports of delight; this is Transportation Week in British Columbia.

The cabinet order proclaiming the fact says the B.C. government "joins the nation in paying tribute to those Canadians, numbering some 700,000, who provide transportation vital to the social and economic well-being of our nation."

Theme of the special week, apparently, is "Keep Canada, Moving." Sounds a bit like a laxative commercial.

Legal problems encountered in transferring ownership have forced the new co-owners — listed as Jan Blake, wife of a Victoria insurance salesman, and outdoors writer Barry Thornton of Courtenay - to change the name to Outdoor Weekly

The new paper is expected to appear this weekend and will follow the format established by the Journal, which ceased to exist after 64 weeks of publication.

Sow And Forget Mini-Garden

Growing plants indoors can be a pain ... but a few suggestions passed on by a professional can take a lot of the worry and work out of this project. As a result, you can grow lettuce all winter and do nothing more than plant and harvest. No watering, no daily pection of soil, no anything ... except fresh greens when others are picking over the tired grocery variety.

In the spring, this mini-gar-den is converted to a plant starter for the outdoor patch. Once again, the sow and for-get method makes the job easy and trouble-free, with

The basic tool behind the sow and forget method is a supply of wicking. This isn't easy to find, but is certainly worth looking for ... and lasts for years once you have

The wicking looks like ordinary sash rope but is made of fibreglass. Apparently this handy material is so little known that few garden stores

You'll find wicking listed on the back page of Melinger's Garden Catalogue, 2310 West South Range Road, North Lima, Ohio 44452. The product sold by that firm is primarily designed for watering potted plants, but could be adapted

The beautiful thing about this indoor gardening aid is that it eliminates all concern about how much water to give young plants. The wick de-livers exactly the right livers exactly the right amount of moisture at all times . . . automatically. Here is how to use wicking effec-

Cut the cord into lengths of approximately 10 inches and fray about three inches of one end. Then poke a hole in the bottom of your planting container, feed the unfrayed end through from inside, and spread the raveled portion to cover as much as possible of the pan's surface. Finally, dump in the potting soil.

How many wicks to use depends on the size of the container—three if you're planting a standard 11 inch by 21 inch flat, and four for a plas-tic dishpan lettuce bed. That may be more than necessary in the second case, but the oisture does have to be drawn through five or six inches of soil and you'll want

The best rule to follow is to eover at least three-fourths of the container's bottom with frayed wicking. This will as-sure every plant of easy access to water.

The unfrayed ends of the wicks will be left dangling about five or six inches below your flat or planting contain-er. Fill a second vessel with water (use plastic dishpans for this, too) and place the flat or lettuce bed right on top. Make certain the cords have more than just their tips hanging in the liquid. The far-ther down they hang, the less you have to be concerned about replenishing water in the reservoir.

The soil which is so efficiently moistened by wick-ing consists of equal parts of peat moss, leaf mulch, and topsoil. Feed this mixture to your earthworm colony (if. you have one) for several months to give the little critters time to work their ferti-

According to a professional advisor, milled sphagnum advisor, milled spinagruin moss used as a planting medium provides seeds with near perfect condition for germination. The product is easily obtained from any garden store or through the mail from most seed companies. You don't need a great deal of the spagnum moss . . . a five-pound sack will last several

To use the planting medium, soak it in water and spread a thin layer over the potting soil in the container. Scatter the seeds and cover them with another thin layer of moss. This tucks the future plants into a moist, sterile blanket.

Why sterile? You'll know if you've ever lost a planting from damping off. This fungus disease—which attacks young plants and causes them to rot at the root - is much less likely to occur when a sterile medium is used.

the money for milled sphag-num moss; you can sterilize

Just put the earth in a con-tainer about four or five inches deep and bury at small potato in the middle. Stick it in an oven at 200 degrees F

Once the container is plant ed, it does under lights. Use two fluorescent fixtures, four feet in length, each holding two bulbs . . . one grow-light and one regular fluorescent tube. Vegetables, and most flowers, don't need total growlight illumination and the use of a standard bulb saves money. This setup will take four flats or four lettuce beds, which is usually plenty.

and when the potato is done, the soil will be sterile.

There you have it: good eating all winter and an almost guaranteed, trouble-free method of raising plants come

Even if you don't have much yard space, you can have a garden with enough fresh vegetables to satisfy your family this summer. If you'd like all the details on just how you can accomplish this, send 25 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to The Mother Earth News, Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria. School Prescribes Limitation Of Television for Children

NEW YORK (NYT) - The diagnosis was an overdose of television and disaster-genre movies, and the symptons had been accumulating throughout the year at the Horace Mann School for Nursery Years. So the faculty issued a prescription: voluntary limitation by parents of the amount and type of material to be viewed by the children, who range in age from 3 to 6 years.

What provoked the move was the observation by teachers at the Manhattan private school of such behavior as:

- Announcement by children that they had seen such films as "The Towering Infer-no," "Earthquake" and "The Godfather."

— The interruption of peaceful block-building ses-sions by cries of Earthquake and destruction of the constructions.

 Recurrent choruses of 'I'm Barman, I'm Superman, I'm a monster, pow, pow, chop, chop," to the occasion accompaniment of wrestling or karate chops.

The faculty at the nursery school decided that the time for action had come. Throughout the year, teachers had been redoubling efforts to divert the imagination used in television play to such proj-

A letter, sent to the parents of the 230 children enrolled and to the families of the 70 incoming pupils, urged them to limit the childrens' yiewing to one hour a day, to montior the choice of programs and to cease taking youngsters to di-saster or crime movies.

"We felt that if the parents were letting their children watch such inappropriate programs, we ought to say some-thing," Eleanor Brussel, the principal, explained.

A Nielsen television survey, the letter said, "indicated that pre-schoolers watch television an average of 54 hours a

"During one year," the let-ter added, "children of school age spend more in time in front of a TV set than they do in front of a teacher; in fact, they spend more time watching TV than any other type of waking activity.

In rubber bridge, becoming vulnerable is the first step on the road to success: You can't win the rubber until you've become vulnerable. In duplicate bridge, on the other hand, being vulnerable is usually a handicap, since each deal stands by itself, each deal stands by itself, bearing no relationship to either the preceding or succeeding deal. Thus being vulnerable tends to limit one's competitive action, especially in part-score deals, for the cost of going down is at the rate of 100 points per trick.

North made an excellent call when, despite his void in clubs, he raised to slam in that suit. As North hopefully interpreted South's bid, the latter figured to have a solid club suit; and if such were the case, the six-dub contract rated to be a good one. It might be noted, incidentally, that any other slam contract would have gone down automatically. But occasions arise in a du-plicate game where being vul-nerable is a lovely state of af-fairs. Such was the case in today's deal, which came up in the National Championships of 1973.

when he was campaigning for governor of California, let it be known 'that his musical chants and the Sufi Choir, and that among his favorite singers was Linda Ronstadt. In fact when Linda played Sacramento earlier this year, the 37-year-old Brown, who had dated her once or twice, invited her to breakfast but her tour schedule didn't allow it. So it's no surprise to learn that the new governor has picked numerous unorthodox selections to pipe over speakers in the nest wall of the capital building and into an adjacent park. He has re-placed Ronald Reagan's more conservative music with four Gregorian chants, a dozen symphonies and concertos, and a stack of wax including "West Meets East," by Yehudl Menuhin and Ravi Shan-"In a Silent Way." Miles Davis; "Heart Like a Wheel," Linda Ronstadt:

Transplanting and Staking Time

done in the garden can occupy a pleasant hour or so after supper. It consists of making small succession sowings, transplanting and stak-

Home gardeners who have sown their seed thinly at approximately the distance needed for the plants to de-velop fully will not be trou-bled with thinning.

Those who still sow thickly will have to spend a few hours on their knees pulling out see-dlings to obtain the necessary four, six, or eight inches be-tween the plants.

The second sowing of let-tuce is now ready for the first transplanting. If the family uses three lettuce a week, se-lect three of the largest seedlings from the seed bed and put them into spaces between the cabbages.

When the seedlings have been lifted place them between a folded sheet of wet newspaper to prevent loss of the invisible feeding roots.

To replant a lettuce, hold the seedling in the left hand with the thumb and first finger at the base of the leaves. Make a hole and set the seedling in place wit hthumb and finger at soil

This keeps the base of the leaves above soil level and prevents rotting, a common complaint when the soil gets over the base of the leaves. In a week's time set out three more seedlings in the same way, and three more again a week later.

If the remainder in the seed bed are large, use at once and sow another dozen seed. This will give a steady supply geared to the family needs and can continue until September.

It is time to start pulling the soil away from the base of onion foliage. Do this gradually, twice a week, until the bulbs are fully exposed and sitting on top of the soil like a golf ball.

The tripods for pole beans should be set in place before the seed is sown; put three seeds at the base of each leg.

Pea stakes, even for the dwarf varieties, are set as soon as the seedlings break surface. Delay in staking often results in damaged vines which yellow and die.

Two other common causes of yellowing are cultivating or walking too close to the vines, causing root damage, and pulling off the pods roughly enough to crack the vines or loosen the roots. Unless you have a strong thumb-nail it is best to remove the pods with

When thinning is needed among carrots, spinach or beets, the job must be done carefully so as not to damage the roots of adjoining seedlings that are to remain.

The correct way to thin is to place the first two fingers of the left hand on each side of the seedling to be removed. Press firmly against the soil and pull out the unwanted plant with the right hand. firmly against each seedling that is to remain.

If it is carrots, push some soil up to the foliage and firm it. Take all the carrot thinnings to some other part of the garden, well away from the carrot row, crush the fo-liage and drop them on the

The odor of the crushed foliage will attract the carrot rust fly and eggs will be depo-sited on the throw-aways in-stead of on wanted plants in the rows.

Next time the grass is cut, scatter a few fresh cuttings thinly along each side of the carrot rows right up to the foliage. The odor of the grass masks the odor of the carrots and fools the fly. Rake up these clippings, and replace with fresh once a week.

If grass cuttings go on your compost heap it is no use putting the crushed thinnings on the heap too, because the odor of the grass will be much stronger than the odor of the carrot tops, and the fly will never find them.

Lions Lodge Blaze

92nd YEAR, No. 2

Fire broke out in the Esquimalt Lions Lodge, 874 Fleming, shortly before 11 a.m. today, trapping the elderly residents on the top floor f the four-storey building.

By the time Esquimalt firemen arrived on the scene smoke was billowing from under the roof and many of the elderly on the top floor had opened their windows and were crying for help.

Firemen brought several of them down by ladder.

It is known that four of the residents have been taken to hospital suffering smoke inhalation and more are expected to be hospitalized as firemen continue to battle the blaze.

According to one resident the fire broke out in a fourth floor room occupied by a Mrs. Smith. The resident, A. G. Taggart, said he heard the fire alarm bell ring at 10:55 a.m. He grabbed a briefcase and left his third floor hurriedly, leaving a pot of potatoes still boiling on the stove.

Hydro Lending Probe?

An all-party committee will recommend to the legislature a full inquiry into the lending practices of B.C. Hydro.

Bob Skelly (NDP - Alberni) made the motion in public accounts committee today and said the legislature should examine how loans were granted, how they were advertised and what connections existed between people who receive loans and B.C.

Agents Meet On ICBC Support

ance Agents' Association of B.C. will decide at a meeting later today whether to support a strike by Insurance Corporation of B.C. Employees by refusing to issue new ICBC policies.

Technical Employees Union, on strike against ICBC for three weeks, asked the independent insurance agents around the province to stop selling ICBC policies.

OTEU president Fred Trotter said Monday he expects the agents to comply with the union's request but said agents who continue to sell the policies will have their offices picketed.

The union, which is nego-tiating with the company for a first contract, is escalating the province.

Trotter said picketing activity could be extended to include independent adjusters and towing companies which continue to handle ICBC busi-

Here's a provincial government announcement calculated to throw all and sundry into transports of delight: this is Transportation Week in British Columbia.

The cabinet order proclaiming the fact says the B.C. government "joins the nation in paying tribute to those Canadians, numbering some 700,000, who provide transportation vital to the social and economic well-being of our nation.'

Theme of the special week, apparently, is "Keep Canada Moving." Sounds a bit like a laxative commercial. + + +

Gibson said the government purchased the boat on April 1 and nearly five weeks went by before it set up the private company to manage the ship. In that time, he said, proper legislative authority could easily have been brought in.

He and other opposition members stressed that they were not against the govern-ment purchase of the ship but only its decision to by-pass the legislature in spending funds to operate it. Barrett said outside the house he did not know what authority the government used to pay the ship's maintenance and staffing costs, but said it was "an emergency situation.'

The opposition also wanted to know if the government has ordered cutbacks on its original budget estimates for the 1975-76 year.

Barrett repeatedly denied there have been any memos sent from Treasury Board ordering a percentage outback or any kind of cutback in spending.

Treasury Board is simply scrutinizing all expenditures closely, he said.

Some departments may be cutting back in some areas because of a decision by the individual minister, said Barrett, but the decision has not come from Treasury Board.

Highways Minister Graham Lea said Monday he will investigate reports that vehi-cles are crammed so tightly aboard the Albion-Fort Langley ferry that passengers can't get out of their cars. He said during debate on his department's estimates that all safety regulations are being met on the ferry.

He was responding to charges by Oak Bay Tory Scott Wallace that demand for the ferry has become so heavy that alternative transportation modes should be studied.

Lea said the problem started in 1972 when the Socred government removed the ferry tolls six weeks before the election.

He said although the increased use has caused traffic congestion problems, the cost of establishing a bridge, which he estimated at between $20 million and $25 million to the cost of the cost lion, would be prohibitive.
